SULC Student Garners First Place in ABA Legal Writing Competition

Margaret M. Corley, a second-year student at the Southern University Law Center, has been named first-prize winner in the American Bar Association (ABA) Health Law Section Legal Writing Competition.

Corley, of Lafayette, Louisiana, wins a $500 honorarium, airfare, hotel for two nights, and a $50 per diem for two days to attend the Emerging Issues in Health Law Conference in Phoenix, Arizona, in February.

Her paper, "Disease or Deprivation: The State's Authority to Quarantine, Depriving the Individuals of Their Constitutional Liberty, in the Shadow of H1N1," will be published in The Health Lawyer, a bi-monthly magazine published by the ABA that provides informative articles on a wide range of topics in the health law field.

Corley's paper was written as a requirement for Prof. Paul Race's Health Law class. Prof. Gail Stephenson nominated the paper for the ABA competition.
